SERIOUSLY. WASH YOUR HANDS

AMERICANS COULD USE CRASH COURSE IN SOAP

Chicago Tribune

Washing your hands after using the bathroom—not to mention after touching any number of public surfaces, from doorknobs to subway handrails to oh-so-disgusting toilet flush levers—is a basic rule of hygiene. Yet we don't always do it properly, if at all, which is particularly ill-advised behavior during flu season, when germy hands are common gateways to infection.

Respondents to a recent survey said they washed their hands an average of 87 percent of the time after using a public restroom, and 62 percent said they have rinsed their hands post-bathroom without using soap. The survey of more than 1,000 people in the U.S. was conducted by Bradley Corp., manufacturer of washroom accessories. Women are significantly better hand washers than men.

Those self-reported findings echo habits observed in a 2010 study from the American Society for Microbiology and the American Cleaning Institute, a trade association for the soap and detergent industry, which sent observers into public restrooms to record people's hand-washing habits. They saw 85 percent of people wash their hands, an improvement from 77 percent in 2007. In a survey that was part of that same study, 77 percent of respondents said they always clean their hands before handling or eating food. Only 39 percent said they always wash their hands after coughing or sneezing.

Considering that people absent-mindedly touch their faces an average of 16 times an hour, according to a 2008 study by researchers at the University of California at Berkeley School of Public Health, and risk transferring germs from their dirty hands to their eyes, noses and mouths, lazy hand washers could use a refresher.

BACK TO BASICS

» The dirtiest parts of your hand are under and around your fingernails, not your palms, according to Elaine Larson, associate dean for research at Columbia University School of Nursing.

» The key is to cover all surfaces of the hands, including between the fingers and in the crevices around fingernails, with a good amount of friction, Larson said.

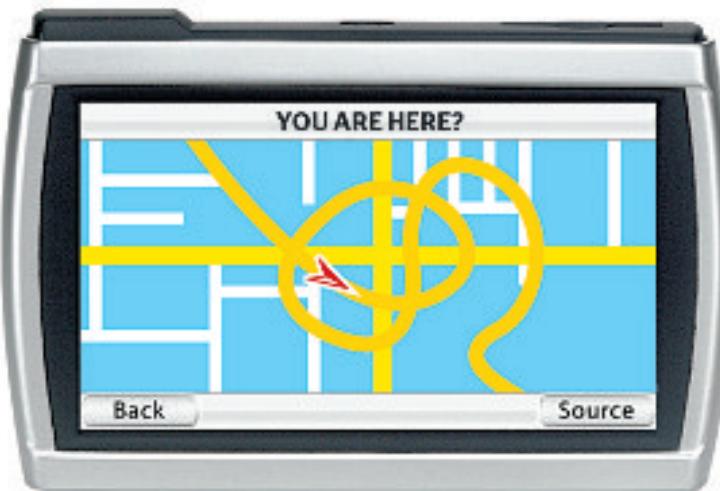

» Using soap is important, not because it kills bacteria, but because it acts as an emulsifier to slip the germs off the hands, she said.

» Washing your hands should take about 20 seconds, or about two rounds of singing "Happy Birthday," according to Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

» The temperature of hand-washing water doesn't matter, Larson said.

» Hand sanitizers are a convenient alternative to hand-washing. Pick one that is at least 60 percent alcohol. Use enough so that your hands are wet for 10 seconds so it has enough time to kill the bacteria, Larson said.

» Hand sanitizers can't kill all germs, such as the norovirus, a highly contagious stomach virus. Washing with lots of friction and then applying hand sanitizer can help against such resistant bugs, Larson said.

Nobody likes you, Clybourn Avenue

It's embarrassing when friends from out of town come to visit me and I have no idea where anything is. I'm not talking about my keys or my phone or my mind—that's just embarrassing on a daily basis. I'm talking about specific locations.

If one more person tells me Chicago is "just a big grid," I'm gonna give him a wedgie. Many a time I have made three right turns and not ended up in the same place. Elston, you bastard! Clybourn, you are a jerkface. And what's up with Ogden? Ogden is like that friend in high school who's a bad influence. Every time I run into her, I end up some place I shouldn't be.

When someone tries to explain the grid system to me, it strums up the same confusion I experience when getting my cash back at the grocery store. Yes, I still pay in cash. And yes, my brain still goes into a tizzy when they try to count it back to me.

"And four, six, eight and 20 makes 10," the cashier says as I stare at her, insanely confused, like a sorority girl who's just seen "Avatar."

My hipster sister who now lives in California informed me there's an area of town referred to as Six Corners. I ain't no geometry wiz, but I'm pretty sure grids involve squares and squares have four corners. Count 'em. Four. While on the phone, she also gave me the ever-annoying anecdote of: "You know what I love about California? You can drive two hours and be somewhere totally different." I can drive for two hours in Chicago and be somewhere totally different too. I just might end up outlined in chalk.

Ever heard of the Viagra Triangle? The West Loop? The Ukrainian Rhombus? Please don't go Googling the last one. I made it up to further prove my point. Unless it's a colossal game of tic-tac-toe, shapes do not belong in a grid.

Here's what I can't quite comprehend. What is the difference between memorizing what numbered block a certain street is ... and just memorizing the street? While we're at it, why are we calling freeways by a number AND a name? It's like when Prince decided to change his name to a symbol just to mess with people. That's what you're doing Chicago—you're messing with me!

Why not get a GPS, you might ask? Because I wouldn't want to rob my father of the joy of receiving my frustrated phone call so he can give me directions for 30 minutes, describing every intersection I'll pass, every stop sign I'll come to, and each bar he used to troll around with his buddy Carl back in the '80s.

I mean if you're gonna tell me that State Street is o east-west and Madison Street is o north-south and I need to get to 1800 ... Wait. I just figured it out.

“He is already the American with perhaps the most astounding, almost mythological, life story.”

—James M. Cornelius, curator of the Lincoln Collection at the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum in Springfield

Pohlad said. After he was shot at Ford's Theater in 1865, and his clothes were removed, the president had more of a tough-guy physique than most would have imagined, Pohlad said.

“Apparently people kind of gasped to see how strong he was,” he said.

Pohlad guesses that while we deal with empty pocketbooks, economic instability and international strife, maybe that ass-kicking Lincoln is exactly what our country wants to see.

“People think, ‘We really need a man of action to lift us out of the dole-drums,’ ” he said. Lincoln’s greatness, partly as a president who could speak to the masses and get things done, came at a time of huge tension during the Civil War and the end of slavery, one of the darkest periods in American history. “He was living in the most violent time our country has known.”

The Steven Spielberg movie “Lincoln,” which promises to be a bit more authentic than the vampire-slaying portrayal, raises historians’ hopes for more attention to the man who often tops lists of the greatest presidents in history.

“This is a great thing. I have no doubt there will be fictionalized parts of this movie,” Cornelius said. But those fictionalizations are “not a new thing.”

There were comic books about Lincoln in the ’50s and the character of Abraham Lincoln has been featured in movies as long as they’ve been made. His traditional stovepipe hat is still gracing graphic novels, fiction books and TV shows, as well as innumerable nonfiction works.

There are always new areas of Lincoln’s life to explore. Cornelius points to the newest Lincoln movie for myth-busting one thing about the former president: his voice.

Day-Lewis has reportedly said he purposely didn’t make Lincoln’s voice booming and deep, instead choosing what experts say is a more accurate tone.

“Lincoln had a high, thin, reedy voice with a very noticeable Kentucky twang his whole life,” Cornelius said.

“And the voice is going to sound very unexpected to the public.”

Regardless of whether historians approve of every moment in the new flick—or whether they say the vampire hunter version of Lincoln is so absurd as to be laughable—they also say the more frequent pop culture appearances for Illinois’ main man are a very good thing.

“At least people are starting to think of this history as just not engraved in stone,” Pohlad said, adding that the 200-year anniversary of his birth sort of “came and went quietly in 2009.” The renewed interest is totally welcome, he said.

“It takes a minute for the country to say, ‘Oh, yeah. Right. It’s about time we re-examined Lincoln.’ ” art history and architecture at DePaul University and an expert on Lincoln. Pohlad said the 16th president was a dude who could seriously hold his own. “He really did have this reputation for being kind of an ass-kicker.”

Honest Abe was, in addition, really buff,

His kind of town

By Georgia Garvey

REDEYE

From the Abraham Lincoln Book Shop on the Near North Side to the Lincoln Restaurant featuring Abe’s mug on the sign in North Center, you can’t hang out in Chicago and escape seeing our 16th president. Hey, the phrase “Land of Lincoln” is stamped on our license plates, for Pete’s sake.

Though Lincoln obviously made his name in the state capital, Springfield, Chicago gets plenty of Lincoln love, too. Honest Abe actually visited Chicago plenty of times. In fact, after he was assassinated, his wife Mary Todd Lincoln moved to Chicago with two of her sons.

“I think people need to know that Chicago occupied a special place in Lincoln’s heart,” said DePaul professor and Lincoln expert Mark Pohlad, who said the president visited the city at least a dozen times. “He and Mary had plans to retire here. ... They loved it.”

The city is dotted with interactions with the man who would later go on to sign the Emancipation Proclamation that ended slavery in 1863.

“Something like a third of the city saw his body” after his death, Pohlad said. “Lincoln would still recognize Lake Street and all the photographers’ studios that he stopped in.”

He also might recognize his own name, which made an unexpected appearance on some sample ballots this election cycle. A 25-year-old Chicago woman was surprised to see Lincoln and Stephen Douglas listed as candidates instead of President Obama and Mitt Romney on her ballot this election Tuesday. Gov. Quinn frequently refers to Lincoln in speeches and when disgraced former Gov. Rod Blagojevich was arrested on corruption charges, prosecutors specifically called out Blagojevich as an embarrassment to Lincoln.

Though Kentucky was where Lincoln was born, James M. Cornelius, curator at the Abraham Lincoln Presidential Library and Museum said Illinois was “the only place he ever chose to live.”

As to whether Chicago might have been Lincoln’s home had he not been the target of an assassin’s bullet, Cornelius said it’s impossible to know.

“It’s hard to imagine that he wouldn’t have spent a lot more time in Chicago after [his term in office],” he said. “He would have been much in demand. And Mary would have liked all the shopping.”

POINTS ON THE BOARD

What do LGBT wins on election night mean for marriage equality advocates?

Los Angeles Times

Same-sex marriage advocates are reveling in their four victories at the ballot box after 32 straight defeats, calling the results in Maine, Maryland, Minnesota and Washington state on Tuesday a sea change for the gay rights movement.

“When the history books are written, 2012 will be remembered as the year when LGBT Americans won decisively at the ballot box,” said Chad Griffin, head of Human Rights Campaign, a gay rights advocacy group. “The dreams of millions of fair-minded Americans were realized as discrimination crumbled and equality prevailed.”

The re-election of President Obama, who in May said he supported gay marriage, and the election of Tammy Baldwin, who will be the first openly gay U.S. senator, further buoyed their hopes that the country is changing.

“It’s hard not to say that this was a huge turning point, a tipping point kind of a year,” said Matt McTighe, campaign manager of Mainers United for Marriage. Maine’s initiative asked voters if the state should be allowed to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples; “yes” on Question 1 won 53 percent to 47 percent. Maine had voted down gay marriage by the same margin in 2009.

Mainers United used a unique tactic in winning its initiative: In the span of three years, it sent staffers and volunteers around the state to knock on doors and change people’s minds. Though results are preliminary, McTighe said the campaign did well in the areas where it focused canvassing efforts, which could serve as a lesson to other states planning gay marriage initiatives.

“Maine is a prime example of a kind of state that really can be looked at as a model for future states because we are a state where we lost before,” he said. “We proved that just because voters have voted one way, you can change hearts and minds, there is a way to do it. We have the playbook and it’s something that can be utilized in any state.”

Proponents of traditional marriage say there’s no big message to be read in the election results. After all, these were Democratic states and do not represent the rest of the country, said Frank Schubert, the California campaign consultant who ran the traditional marriage campaigns in all four states.

“It was a good night for them, but it doesn’t portend any significant change in the country,” he said. “It may actually end up helping us long-term.”

The votes may energize supporters of traditional marriage, whose financial resources were spread thin this election. Polling shows that if gay marriage had been put to a nationwide vote, it would have been rejected Tuesday, Schubert said.

“The American people continue to view marriage as a union between one man and one woman,” he said. “There’s nothing about last night that changes that.”

The fact that all four states were outside the Bible Belt did play a role in the victory for gay marriage advocates, said Edward Schiappa, a professor at the University of Minnesota who has followed the marriage battle there. But there were other important factors too. For one thing, some church groups, including the Evangelical Lutheran Church of America in Minnesota, endorsed gay marriage, allowing religious voters to support initiatives allowing same-sex couples to marry. For another, gay marriage advocates had a better ground game than they did in California in 2008, when they relied too heavily on advertising.

—Matt McTighe, campaign manager of Mainers United for Marriage

And lastly, he said, conservatives are starting to learn that scaring voters into voting against gay marriage may not work much longer, he said.

“The fear appeals relied upon by opponents of same-sex marriage appear to have run their course,” he said, referring to arguments made by opponents that children will be exposed to homosexuality at school, and that religious institutions will be threatened by gay marriage. “This time, these arguments failed to persuade a majority, suggesting a growing number of voters simply found them unpersuasive or implausible.”

Supporters of the law, which was signed by Maryland’s Democratic Gov. Martin O’Malley, won by 100,000 votes.

same-sex marriage, just six months after North Carolina passed a constitutional amendment banning same sex marriage by a 2-1 margin.

Minnesota voters rejected a proposed constitutional amendment on same-sex marriage, although gay marriage still is against the law in the state. Only 49 percent of voters supported the law, which had been polling neck and neck in the days before the election.

Because most of Washington votes by mail-in ballot, final results weren't yet available in the state, which was also voting whether to support a pro-gay marriage law passed by the state legislature. But the latest results on Measure 74, which received hefty donations from Bill and Melinda Gates and New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg, show that supporters of the law were leading 52 percent to 48 percent.

Both sides now will look to the Supreme Court to make the next move. It will decide whether to hear cases regarding California's Prop. 8 and the Defense of Marriage Act, both of which were struck down by appeals courts. If it does decide to hear those cases, the court likely will rule next year.

ABOUT TUESDAY NIGHT ...

President Obama's re-election wasn't the only national story that unfolded Election Day (and, more accurately, early the next day). Here's what else was making waves across the nation. CNN

Pass the pot?

Pro-pot groups on Wednesday cheered passage of referendums legalizing recreational marijuana in Colorado and Washington states as the "light at the end of the tunnel" in their 50-year campaign to make the drug legal nationwide.

But Colorado Gov. John Hickenlooper warned it's too soon to "break out the Cheetos," because his state must still navigate federal laws before citizens can legally buy and sell cannabis.

The Drug Enforcement Administration quickly tried to spoil the Rocky Mountain high, issuing a statement Wednesday morning saying the DEA's "enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act remains unchanged."

Caution: Cliff ahead

A day after an election that both parties agreed was a mandate to find compromise and avoid the so-called fiscal cliff, Democratic and Republican congressional leaders continued to sharply disagree over the key issue of whether top tax rates should be raised to help resolve the looming crisis.

Republicans said higher rates would damage the economy, while Democrats said it was the only equitable way to tackle the debt.

Congress faces an end-of-the-year deadline before massive spending cuts kick in and tax breaks begin to expire, including the Bush-era tax cuts at the end of December.

In Puerto Rico ...

In an overshadowed contest, Puerto Ricans voted in favor of statehood in a nonbinding referendum, marking the first time such an initiative garnered a majority.

Puerto Ricans were asked about their desires in two parts. First, by a 54 percent to 46 percent margin, voters rejected their current status as a U.S. commonwealth. In a separate question, 61 percent chose statehood as the alternative, compared with 33 percent for the semi-autonomous "sovereign free association" and 6 percent for outright independence.

An economic downturn and shrinking population were the factors that contributed to the support for statehood, where referendums in 1967, 1993 and 1998 failed, Puerto Rico Secretary of State Kenneth McClintock said.

CALEFAX REED QUINTET

Calefax are in great demand worldwide. The five musicians arrange, recompose and interpret music from eight centuries to suit their unique constellation: from early music to classical and jazz; in the hands of Calefax it all sounds fresh and new. The Amsterdam-based ensemble can be heard frequently throughout Europe and farther afield in Russia, China, India, Turkey, Japan and the USA.

HOMICIDE TRACKER

By Tracy Swartz

TSWARTZ@TRIBUNE.COM | @TRACYSWARTZ

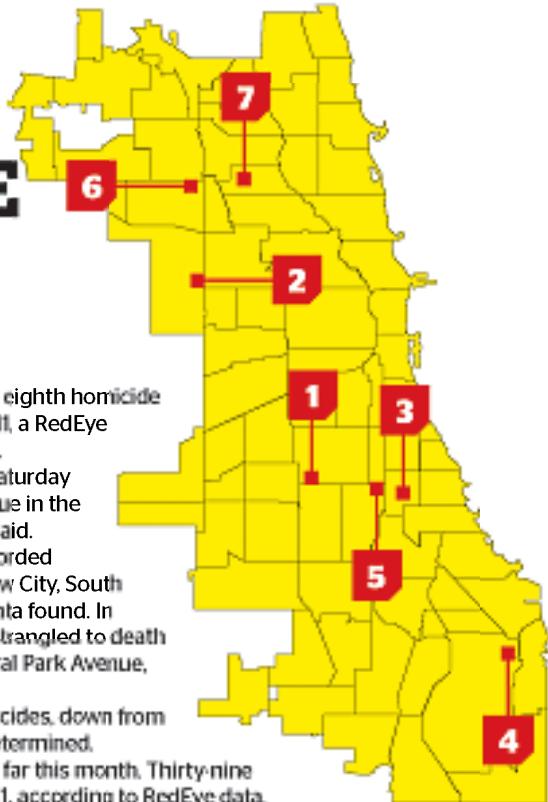

Belmont Cragin on Saturday recorded its eighth homicide of the year, up from two homicides in 2011, a RedEye analysis of preliminary police data found.

A 29-year-old man was shot to death Saturday in the 4900 block of West Diversey Avenue in the Northwest Side community area, police said.

Citywide, gunshot homicides were recorded in the last week in Austin, Englewood, New City, South Deering and Washington Park, RedEye data found. In Avondale, a 39-year-old man was found strangled to death Tuesday in the 3100 block of North Central Park Avenue, police said.

October ended last week with 39 homicides, down from 48 homicides in October 2011, RedEye determined.

Five homicides have been recorded so far this month. Thirty-nine homicides were logged in November 2011, according to RedEye data.

STORM CENTRAL

7 NEW YORK A wintry storm dropped snow and rain on the Northeast on Wednesday, bringing dangerous winds and knocking out power in a region where hundreds of thousands still were in the dark after Superstorm Sandy.

The nor'easter brought fresh misery to thousands in New Jersey, New York and Connecticut, where homes were destroyed by Sandy when it smashed ashore Oct. 29, bringing historic flooding and high winds. The storm killed 120 people in the U.S. and Canada.

Some 22,000 homes and businesses from the Carolinas to New York lost power Wednesday, joining the more than 640,000 customers who still lacked electricity after one of the biggest and costliest storms ever to hit the country.

New York and New Jersey evacuated the most vulnerable coastal areas ahead of the nor'easter, which was forecast to bring a high tide about 2 feet above normal by early Thursday.

No major flooding was reported during the storm's first hours, though New York warned residents whose homes had flooded during Sandy to consider moving to friends' homes on higher ground or to city shelters.

Christine Jones, 73, said she had continued to live without heat or power in her beachside apartment building in coastal Far Rockaway in New York—even though it means climbing the

"They tell us to evacuate," she said, but she and her neighbors do not want to leave. "They're scared they're going to be robbed. ... The teenage boys ... they try to break in."

In any case, Jones' 1999 Buick was dead after water from the Atlantic Ocean washed over it during Sandy, leaving her with no means to evacuate the narrow peninsula she calls home.

Jimmy Butler
US PRESSWIRE

TWANG IT

If you're going to be a cowboy, you're going to need the right soundtrack, and Jimmy Butler's got it down. The Bulls forward is a huge country music fan. "Brad Paisley, he's cold!" Butler said. "I like Taylor Swift. Her music, I don't know why, but it's catchy. If it comes on while I'm out there warming up before the game, I'm singing it." We asked Butler to name his top country music artists. —B.C.

URBAN COWBOY

BULLS' JIMMY BUTLER IS A LITTLE BIT COUNTRY—MAKE THAT A LOT COUNTRY

By Bryan Crawford

FOR REDEYE

If you don't know a lot about Jimmy Butler, Bulls fans, it's understandable. He didn't see a lot of action as a rookie last season.

His sophomore campaign will be different as No. 21 is expected to contribute a lot more this season. But the question remains: who is Jimmy Butler?

The answer may surprise you.

He hails from Tomball, Texas, a small town of about 11,000 people that's 34 miles north of Houston. Given that proximity, one might think Butler would have big-city tendencies.

But Butler calls dinner "supper" and has an affinity for country music and cowboy boots. In fact, his boot collection is similar to most basketball players' sneaker stashes.

"I feel like it's my own thing," Butler said. "It's not my way of being different; I just want my own style. Not too many people do it. I'm from Tomball, a small town—it's country. But that's where I'm from and I like wearing cowboy boots. My teammates get a kick out of it, but it's just like wearing Adidas, like wearing Jordans or wearing Nikes."

His teammates certainly enjoy teasing him about it.

"You know, I guess that's that Texas swag," said Joakim Noah, a New York native. "I mean, I've never met a black man that wore cowboy boots like that before."

Taj Gibson, another native New Yorker, was even less diplomatic.

"It's terrible, just terrible," Gibson said. "But that's his swag so I'm gonna roll with him. But it's not me at all."

Butler didn't wear cowboy boots as a kid; it wasn't until he got to college that his inner cowboy was set free. "When I was at Marquette, everyone kept calling me 'country' and saying I had cows in my backyard and stuff like that," said Butler, who's averaging 4.5 points in 14 minutes per game this season. "So I was like, OK, you wanna call me a cowboy? I'll show y'all a cowboy."

"So I started wearing Wranglers, cowboy boots, hats, the belt buckles, all of that good stuff. And now that I'm here in Chicago, my teammates know that I love country music. They know that I own a guitar. So I figured why not play into the stereotype?"

While many of Butler's teammates aren't familiar with the concept of the black cowboy, Carlos Boozer is not one of them. After years playing for the Utah Jazz, he became acquainted with another NBA player who was about the cowboy life.

"I'm used to seeing Karl Malone with the country gear on in Utah," Boozer said. "So I told Jimmy that The Mailman does it too, but he goes all out. He has the belt buckle, the ten-gallon hat, all that. Jimmy doesn't rock it like that."

Nate Robinson, Butler's closest friend on the team, is open to wearing cowboy gear, but with conditions.

"I told him I'll wear the cowboy stuff one day, but he's got to wear Jordans and stuff that I like. And I told him, if I wear the cowboy gear, I'm going hard. I need the boots, the big belt buckle, the button-up shirt tucked in, the hat, the straw. See, he doesn't do that; he does it half-ass. He's a half-ass cowboy. I'm going all the way with it."

Trade these big names while you still can

FANTASY FIX

Dan Richman
@danrichmanffl

If you believe your fantasy team has a chance for something special this year and you have one of these guys on your team, now is the time to think about trading him.

DAN RICHMAN HOSTED A FANTASY FOOTBALL SHOW ON THE SCORE (670-AM) FOR YEARS UNDER THE MONIKER "SUPER FAN DAN." DISAGREE WITH HIM? TWEET DAN @DANRICHMANFFL.

Eli Manning
NY. Giants

This Super Bowl champion quarterback has not been super for fantasy players. I loved Manning as a top-tier fantasy quarterback going into the season, but it looks like I was wrong. He hasn't thrown a touchdown in his last two games and is averaging just over one score per game. The Giants signal-caller is looking especially off-course in the red zone. Others may trade for Manning thinking he is better than he is or that he may recapture last year's success.

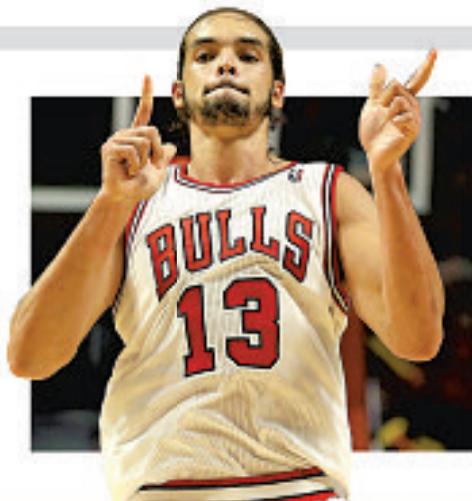

Andre Johnson
Houston

The year is 2012, not 2010 or 2009, when Johnson was considered the NFL's best fantasy wide receiver. He looks slow and has had too many drops for my liking. The Pro Bowl wideout's stock is high after catching eight balls for 118 yards last week against a weak Buffalo defense. Johnson's schedule is favorable the rest of the way, but at this point in his career he's the third or fourth option in Houston. Trade him while there's still value.

Alfred Morris
Washington

This sixth-round draft pick from Florida Atlantic has been a terrific find for Washington and fantasy owners; however, one must ask if the Morris wave is coming to an end. He has not scored in three weeks and is averaging 67.5 yards per game over the past two weeks. Opposing defenses are making adjustments and are keying in on Morris as well as Robert Griffin III. Now is the time to trade this fine rookie running back and get value in return.

But, think of the fans!

Bulls center Joakim Noah was scolded by coach Tom Thibodeau on Wednesday for taking a 3-pointer at the end of Tuesday's 99-93 win over Orlando at the United Center. Noah was trying to earn fans a free Big Mac, which is awarded when the Bulls score 100 points in a home win. "I regret it a little bit," Noah told espn.com. "It wasn't a good shot. You have to respect the game because you never know what can happen in a game." At least his heart—er, stomach—was in the right place.

O HOLY OPENING NIGHT

'Tis already the season: Holiday-themed shows hit Chicago stages

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

We've barely finished trick-or-treating but it's already time to replace your faux spider webs and superhero costumes with visions of sugarplums and tidings of comfort and joy. Too soon, you say? Au contraire! We've found five shows to transport you from Halloween to the winter holidays.

We Three Lizas

7 p.m. Nov. 30 through Dec. 23 at The Steppenwolf Garage, 1624 N. Halsted St.

Tickets: $25; $15 for students; 312-335-1650; steppenwolf.org

What happens when a greedy powermonger attempts to conjure up youth, beauty and wealth from the Queen of Three Wishes, but a gift-bearing Liza Minnelli arrives instead? Find out when About Face Theatre mounts the world premiere of this gender-bending, dark musical comedy about the holidays by artistic associate Scott Bradley ("Alien Queen," "Carpenters Halloween"), who also stars as Liza. Bonus: The evening begins with a 45-minute Liza Cocktail Hour featuring a rotating roster of opening acts.

The Dead

7:30 p.m. Thursday through Dec. 9 at Court Theatre, 5535 S. Ellis Ave.

Tickets: $35-$65; 773-753-4472; courttheatre.org

While you may not immediately associate "James Joyce" with "show tunes," stay with us here. This Tony Award-winning musical adaptation of Irish writer Joyce's evocative short story about a Victorian-Era Dublin family that gathers for the Feast of the Epiphany features Irish music and dance, and the instruments are all played onstage by the cast.

It's a Wonderful Pro-Life

8 p.m. Tuesday (preview); 8 p.m. Fridays Nov. 16-Dec. 28 at Studio BE, 3110 N. Sheffield Ave.

Tickets: $15, $10 preview; 773.248.5900; studio-be.org

The Christmas spirit gets hijacked—along with the cast's morale—in this new, R-rated original comedy by 4 Days Late ("Jersey Shore: The Musical"). The show follows a theater group whose recording of a radio play for NPR—a satire about the commercialization of the holidays—goes awry when a selfish cast member interferes with the production for his own purposes. Follow the cast members onstage and behind the scenes as they attempt to rally together in the true spirit of the holidays to bring their show back to life.

Best Musical! Holiday Edition!

7:30 p.m. Nov. 28 through Dec. 19 at Stage 773, 1225 W. Belmont Ave.

Tickets: $15, $12 for students; 773-327-5252; porchlightmusictheatre.org

Move over, MTV Music Awards—Porchlight Music Theatre presents the Bestie Awards, where the cast creates and performs the "Best Song" nominees from a grab bag of audience-suggested titles and you vote for your favorite. After intermission, the cast performs a fully improvised holiday musical comedy complete with lights, costumes and newly created music and choreography—including the Bestie Award-winning song from the first act.

Charles Dickens Begrudgingly Performances 'A Christmas Carol.' Again.

Nov. 29 through Dec. 24 at The Building Stage, 412 N. Carpenter St.

Tickets: $15-$30; $5-$20 for students; 312-491-1369; buildingstage.com

Flashback to 1812: Charles Dickens is born. Move ahead to 1843: Dickens publishes "A Christmas Carol." Jump to 1853: Encouraged by its success and motivated by a need for cash, Dickens gives his first public reading of the tale and it's a hit. Flash forward to 2012: It's 160 years later and Dickens is still doing these readings—and he's beyond bitter about it. The Building Stage celebrates the 200th anniversary of Dickens' birth with artistic director Blake Montgomery's humorous solo show which captures the essence of the classic tale as Dickens rediscovered his passion for it.

Bar Pastoral cheese plate

Yes, there will be cheese—but that's not all the Lakeview restaurant has in store

By Lisa Arnett | REDEYE

Between Dale Levitski's Frog N Snail and Chuy Valencia's former restaurant Chilam Balam, Broadway in East Lakeview already is something of a "Top Chef" hot spot. With the opening of Bar Pastoral with "Top Chef: Seattle" chef contestant Chrissy Camba in the kitchen, the neighborhood is gaining even more attention from fans of the Bravo show, now in its 10th season. Here are five things you should know about the first restaurant from the owners of gourmet shop Pastoral Artisan Cheese, Bread & Wine, due to open Monday at 2947 N. Broadway. LMARNETT@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEATS

General Manager Mark Hayes
NADIM AUDI PHOTOS

It's been a long time coming

"We had always thought that ultimately, we wanted to have a sit-down extension of our concept," said co-owner Greg O'Neill, who opened the first location of Pastoral in East Lakeview with Ken Miller in 2004. "People have been asking for it and we've always wanted the opportunity to do it." O'Neill and Miller opened a second location in the Loop and a third inside the Chicago French Market in the West Loop, but neither had enough sit-down space for a full-service restaurant. When the storefront opened up next door, they jumped on it. "The whole reason why we created this was so people could see how to use the things they buy in our store." Expect cheese plates, charcuterie, bar snacks and heartier plates both small and large.

Try the bubbly on tap

Just like Pastoral's retail wine selection, Bar Pastoral's wine list is tightly edited and features small producers—some you can't find elsewhere in Chicago. Sixteen wines each are $10 a glass, including a sparkling wine on tap made especially for the restaurant by Michigan winery L. Mawby. There also will be three craft beers on tap and more by the bottle, sherries and cocktails showcasing spirits from one craft distiller per quarter. "We're not throwing the kitchen sink at you," O'Neill said. "You get all sorts of choices, but edited enough that we know about it, we can speak intelligently about it and we can pair it well [with food]."

Save room for the ham

When asked what three dishes RedEye readers should not miss, Camba named the cheese board, pizza nuts ("They're pizza-flavored bar nuts with some podda cheese, which is kind of like a parmesan") and roasted ham. "I just cooked off one of the hams that we had brined, and it's pretty much off the hook," Camba said. "I wanted to eat the entire thing, and I was like, 'I have to save it for the restaurant and for staff training!' It's so freaking good, though."

It won't be a scene

Sure, the chef happens to be on TV, but "we're not looking to create a place that is packed to the gills like in Wrigleyville or Wicker Park or Bucktown. This is not meant to be this large din like you get in River North," O'Neill said. "We're looking for it to be a little bit more of a refuge. So it's not meant to be a loud, of-the-moment spot. It's really meant to be the kind of place that people can enjoy and kind of escape to rather than need to escape from."

Don't forget to look up

Local lamp designer Ted Harris created lighting fixtures out of dairy antiques, so look for a chandelier made from glass butter churns above the bar and lighting made from a milking device above a table for six. "We're calling it the udder table to be a little punny," O'Neill said.

BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

We're number 1... 2 and 3!

Local brewers really, really know their pale ale

Chicago Tribune

Doesn't a road trip to the pale ale capital of the U.S. sound like delicious fun? Of course it does. Well, good news: We're already there. At last month's Great American Beer Festival, a three-day extravaganza of craft beer, Chicago-area brewers took the top three spots from among 109 beers entered in the American-style pale ale category. It was a coup for us beer-loving flatlanders for a couple of reasons.

Here is a look at the three winners that make us Pale Ale City, USA, at least until 2013.

The Weight

Piece Brewery and Pizzeria

When Piece brewmaster Jonathan Cutler wanted to create a tribute to The Band drummer Levon Helm, who died in April, he did what he does best: He made beer. In this case he wanted to craft a beer with crisp strength and familiar appeal, kind of like The Band. Then he named it for one of The Band's best-known songs.

Try it: The Weight is available only on draft at Piece, and should be there through the end of the year. 1927 W. North Ave.; 773-772-4422; piecechicago.com

Brickstone APA
Brickstone Restaurant and Brewery

Tucked along a strip of Bourbonnais car dealerships, Brickstone spent 10 years as a popular diner. Sensing the burgeoning craft beer trend, cousins Tommy Vasilakis, 31, and George Giannakopoulos, 36, persuaded their parents to convert the restaurant to a brewpub featuring Vasilakis and Giannakopoulos as the brewers. Giannakopoulos' brother, Dino, manages the food.

Try it: Brickstone APA often is on tap at The Map Room, Bar on Buena and Fountainhead. The brewpub, about 60 miles south of Chicago, is worth a trip, however, for the broad roster of well-made beer. 557 William R. Latham Sr. Drive, Bourbonnais; 815-936-9277, brickstonebrewery.com

Zombie Dust pale ale

Zombie Dust

Three Floyds

The popular Zombie Dust was brewed on a whim in late 2010 when brewer Chris Boggess was experimenting with a shipment of Citra hops. He was pleased with the result: intensely lush, but beautifully balanced. Still, he was surprised at the reaction at Three Floyds' pub. "People started freaking out," Boggess said. "It was kind of an accident—well, not an accident—but a happy circumstance that people liked it so much."

Try it: Three Floyds' pub (9750 Indiana Parkway, Munster; 219-922-4425; 3floyds.com) is the most faithful source of Zombie Dust both on draft and in six packs, though a handful of bars, including Hopleaf, often have it on draft in Chicago.

90s PARTY FROM 7PM—CLOSE

Time flies when you're having fun! We started RA Sushi in 1997 with little more than a taste for great sushi and a good time. 15 short years later, RA has grown from our original location in Old Town Scottsdale, Arizona to 25 and counting nationwide.

As a big "Thank You" to all of our guests who helped get us where we are, we're celebrating with a guest appreciation day and the mother of all 90s parties.

And as a thank you to the community for its support, we're donating 15% of our profits for the day to The Northern Illinois Food Bank.

Join us at 7PM for a slammin' party with radical food and drink specials. Or come in any time and get 15% off your bill all day long. Either way you're sure to have an awesome time. It's more fun in the RA!

Drink this!

MAYAN MOCHA
Star Lounge Coffee Bar
2521 W. Chicago Ave., 773-384-7827
starloungecoffee.com

The Mayan Mocha is Star Lounge's signature drink for a reason: Time spent with Violet Hour cocktailers inspired owner Jesse Diaz to push the ingredient quality to rare levels for coffee drinks. Vietnamese cinnamon, Mexican dry cayenne, agave nectar and African Tikal chocolate sauce combine with steamed milk and a three-shot espresso extraction (in the 12-ounce "small") to create a unique experience. The result is a sort of cafe mole, complete with an enticing chocolate beginning and palpable heat at the end that sits in the back of your throat long after each sip. Agave provides balanced sweetness without sugar. The espresso (from their own brand of beans, Dark Matter, also in many Chicago restaurants) provides a huge buzz, plus hints of peanut butter and walnut. Disclaimer: Drinking on an empty stomach may induce a floating sensation.

Odzy cheese, wonderfully seasoned ground beef and spinach with feta are the fillings you'll find in City Fresh Market's classic Eastern European oblong burek. Owner Danny Kovacevic insists on having his kitchen pull the paper-thin phyllo dough by hand daily, yielding an impossibly flaky savory crust. The finicky dough must be pulled with power yet delicacy to yield just the right thickness. While it's a tad thicker than the sheets of French pastry in a croissant, the added toothsome texture is soul-satisfying. The small size, meant for one or two people, runs $3.49, while the large, which serves four to six, sets you back $6.99.

Local rock DJ lends his voice to 'Halo' fighter

Chicago Tribune

Chicago has an unusually rich history of providing video game voices, a tradition that continues with this week's release of "Halo 4," the latest game in the blockbuster franchise.

Steve Downes, classic rock DJ for the highly rated Chicago morning radio show on The Drive, WDRV, voices Master Chief in the series, while Jen Taylor, a Seattle actress who studied theater at Northwestern University, voices the character Cortana.

The distinction may seem trivial, except the job of the video game voice actor, and the increasing pains developers take to match cinematic games with believable performances, mirrors the growing ambitions of the industry. The profession even has its own stars now, most of whom are based in Hollywood.

But partly thanks to Chicago's acting pool and its early place in the development of arcade games (a business that sprung somewhat from the loins of the Chicago pinball machine industry) many video game voices may sound familiar to Chicagoans. Here's a select sample of other Chicago voices that have appeared in video games.

Steve Downes, the voice of Master Chief

NANCY STONE/TRIBUNE

» James Vincent Meredith, Steppenwolf Theatre ensemble member: Prophet in the "Crysis" series

» Tim Kitzrow, voice-over actor: Announcer in "NBA Jam"

» Francis Guinan, Steppenwolf ensemble: Keeper in "Star Wars: Knights of the Old Republic"

» Joe Janes, Second City faculty member: Raul in "You Don't Know Jack"

“ I would be lying if I didn't say I get the temptation to nudge a stranger and say, 'Hey. See that guy in the green helmet? Guess what?"

—Steve Downes, 62, of Park Ridge, who voices Master Chief in the "Halo" series.

» Hernan Sanchez, DJ: Fight referee in "Mortal Kombat"

» Tim Dadabo, voice-over actor: Guilty Spark in "Halo," Leisure Suit Larry in "Leisure Suit Larry"

» Pete Stacker, voice-over actor: Capt. Keyes in the "Halo" series

» Norm Woodel, voice-over actor: Braden in "Star Wars: Knights of the Old Republic," Elites in "Halo"

» John Doremus, radio personality (died in 1995): Sinistar in "Sinistar"

Harrington College of Design offers graduate programs in Interior Design and Communication Design that can help you create powerful design solutions by focusing not only on aesthetics, but also on strategic thinking, collaboration, and technical knowledge. We offer different paths – for those with a Bachelor's degree in their field of study and those with a Bachelor's degree in an unrelated field.

NEW PROGRAM

Web Design & Development – Create and Code for Tomorrow's Web

Harrington offers a Bachelor's program in Web Design and Development that stands out. Not limited to designing for the web, it will teach you to think, speak, create, and code websites and apps for computers, iPhones, iPads and other digital devices. Our holistic approach will engage you in collaboration as you develop a strong foundation in design and technical skills along with business and liberal arts education.

Lacquers to nail a sleek 007 look

Los Angeles Times

As part of a merchandising tie-in with "Skyfall," the new James Bond movie opening Friday, OPI has rolled out a limited-edition collection of Bond-themed nail lacquers for the holidays. The Skyfall collection consists of a dozen colors named after familiar titles from the 50-year, 23-film franchise. They include:

Casino Royale: This high-rolling plum is fit for royalty.

Die Another Day: Live in the moment in this hot and lively red.

GoldenEye: All eyes will be upon you when you wear this glorious gold.

Live & Let Die: Burn the candles on both ends in this private-jet black.

Moonraker: Drive your fastest car to get this exhilarating metallic gray.

The Spy Who Loved Me: A red as romantic as the secret agent inside you.

Skyfall: Get Bonded with this magnificent maroon.

Tomorrow Never Dies: This eternally intense purple will live forever.

On Her Majesty's Secret Service: This misty-green pewter commands attention.

The Living Daylights: This courageous multi-hued glitter sparkles 24/007.

The World Is Not Enough: A rosy silver is as addictive as it is beautiful.

Goldfinger (perhaps the most nail-color-appropriate name of any Bond movie) was AWOL. A company representative confirmed: Because the name Goldfinger had been given an international trademark, OPI was barred from using it—which is why the company opted for the less obvious GoldenEye.

But it probably won't hurt sales—especially because that's one of the two shades "Skyfall" makeup artist Naomi Donne used to create the unique on-screen look of Berenice Marlohe's two-tone nails in the upcoming film. Donne also used the Skyfall shade. According to the movie's production notes, the topside-bottomside nature of the two-tone nails required a nail technician to be on location during all of Marlohe's scenes.

Bond girl gets cozy

Los Angeles Times

Bond Girls are known for being ubiquitous symbols of beauty, class and style, so it's no surprise that actress Bérénice Marlohe has taken on the role. She plays Séverine in the 23rd James Bond film, "Skyfall," opening Friday.

The French beauty has been spotted around the globe proving just how stylish she can be in outfits worthy of any Bond love interest. She chose a sleeveless royal blue peplo number by Julien Macdonald at a photo call in Moscow and a draped aqua blue dress by Roksanda Ilincic in Istanbul.

Marlohe was photographed at a recent photo call for the film at the Crosby Street Hotel in New York City in a Salvatore Ferragamo fall 2012 military-green coat and Tod's knee-high boots. On the runway, Ferragamo showed this look with matching high-waist pants, a silky top, belt and riding boots. Marlohe covered up, but the coat's shape, her loose waves and high boots amp up the sex appeal, proving you don't have to show skin to turn heads.

Fashion expert Stacy London finds 'Truth' in personal style

For the record: Stacy London, longtime co-host of "What Not to Wear," is wearing a glittery Christmas-tree-green pencil skirt, a black crew neck sweater with a cat's face on the front, chunky green jewelry and a pair of textured stilettos with thick ankle straps. It's a bold and unusual mix, and she wears it happily, describing it as an outfit full of "joy and whimsy."

Earlier this month, London was dressed up to promote her new book, "The Truth About Style." In it, she discusses her own journey: a devastating bout of psoriasis as a child during which she felt like "a monster"; a long struggle with eating disorders and weight fluctuation as a young adult (she's been every size from 00 to 16); a lifelong fascination with fashion and its relationship to self-acceptance and confidence. The book also profiles nine other women who are facing their own obstacles to style—and who London, after getting to know them, helps to find their best looks.

London said that she was originally approached by her publisher to write a memoir.

"I said, 'I'm 43! I have more to do—I'm going to date some more people,'" she said, laughing. "It seemed a little early in life for that. But I really did want the opportunity to dimensionalize myself more than the persona that you know from 'What Not to Wear.'" (The show, on TLC since 2003, features "contributors" nominated by their friends and families for their awful personal style. London and co-host Clinton Kelly, displaying an impressive balance of snark and empathy, trash the guests' wardrobes, then work with them to effect an often dramatic transformation.)

But London didn't just want to share her own story.

"I don't feel I'm interesting enough for 10 whole chapters on me," she said. "I wanted [readers] to see a range of women, to feel like you could see yourself in all of them or some of them, to make it feel more universal than just my personal experience."

The message London wants to spread: that we should find joy in clothes that celebrate us as we are, rather than succumbing to negative messages from magazines. (That's long been a tenet of "What Not To Wear," whose participants are never told that they should lose a few pounds.) Though London says she loves the creativity and innovation of the fashion industry, she's disturbed by "the idea that this industry is now dictating to the individual how she should feel about herself. That's weird to me. It's not like, say, the automotive industry makes us feel badly about ourselves." It's crucial, she says, to draw the line between fashion (the industry) and style (the individual).

"I wrote the book because I wanted women to feel less alone," she told an enthusiastic crowd in Seattle. "What happened is that I feel less alone."

DIFFICULTY RATING: ★★★★☆

TODAY IN THE YEAR...

1892: Former President Grover Cleveland defeated incumbent Benjamin Harrison, becoming the first (and, to date, only) chief executive to win nonconsecutive terms to the White House.

1966: The Baltimore Orioles' Frank Robinson was named American League MVP, making him the first man so honored in both leagues. (He was National League MVP in 1961 with the Cincinnati Reds.)

2002: The U.N. Security Council unanimously approved a resolution giving U.N. weapons inspectors the muscle they needed to hunt for illicit weapons in Iraq.

THE STORY OF A GIRL

Britney's novel needs these key plot points

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Singer, dancer, perfume-maker, actress ... author? Britney Spears is looking to add a career to her bag of tricks—she's in talks for a book deal that would include writing a novel, thr.com reports. The book (or series) would be based on events from her real life, which, as we all know, has no shortage of high jinks. Here are a few plot developments Brit just can't overlook in her quest for literary stardom, and how she can tweak them for the fictional page. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | REDEYE.DANA ► REAL LIFE: Had her heart broken by Justin Timberlake, probably was more than a little humiliated by "Cry Me a River." NOVEL: Beat Justin to the punch with her own breakup song, which becomes the top-selling single of all time.

REAL LIFE: Shaved her head during a breakdown. NOVEL: Inspired a haircut called "The Britney," a la "The Rachel," creating millions of copycats.

REAL LIFE: Was married to a childhood friend (pictured above) for 55 hours. NOVEL: Childhood friend turned out to be the love of her life, and they rode away together on the back of a unicorn.

REAL LIFE: Had a disastrous VMAs comeback in 2007 "dancing" to "Gimme More." NOVEL: Totally blew the performance out of the water, causing Justin Timberlake to come crawling back to her.

REAL LIFE: Danced with a snake at the VMAs. NOVEL: Same thing, but with a bunch of dudes riding tigers around her. Sometimes the truth only needs a little embellishment.

red hot $1 MILLION

Bad news, Lil Wayne fans. The release date for Weezy's next album, "I Am Not a Human Being 2," has been postponed again—this time from its Dec. 11 target, billboard.com reports. The sequel to his 2010 record is now expected to drop in 2013. GETTY IMAGES

"I'm just going to let people watch whatever little movie they would like to think our lives are and go for it."

—Kristen Stewart, on the "Today" show, responding to a question about whether she's back in a relationship with Robert Pattinson. "Keep 'em guessing, I always say," she added.

That's the size of a donation Lady Gaga made to the American Red Cross' superstorm Sandy relief effort. "Thank you for helping me build my spirit. I will now help you rebuild yours," the New York native tweeted.

Guest star

When Rihanna storms the United Center on March 22, she'll have a special guest: A$AP Rocky. The New York rapper, who performed with RiRi at the MTV Video Music Awards in September, will join the full North American portion of the Diamonds World Tour. billboard.com reports.

Deepest dish

Nick Offerman is Chicago through and through—even when it comes to his pizza. "If properly dried and trimmed, New York-style pizza could be used to make a box for Chicago-style pizza," the "Parks and Recreation" star told Bon Appetit magazine. "I love a slice when I'm in NYC, but it's like eating a Slim Jim compared with a filet mignon." Truth!

NOV. 25

That's when "Downton Abbey Revisited" will air on PBS stations. Angela Lansbury hosts the behind-the-scenes look at the first two seasons of the hit British series. Season 3 begins Jan. 6.
